

10. Artificially Maintained Balance Through Bypasses and Chemicals, Necessary Change of Flows and Creation of Conditions

If communication is blocked, the body tries to find alternative communication pathways in order to maintain the balance of BEING as much as possible. These alternative pathways are mostly called bypasses.

The results of these substitute solutions vary.

How do Western, Eastern and holistic medicine try to create the conditions for restoring the health of subsystems, systems and supersystems?

We mentioned the 7 phases.

The creation of conditions will differ in prevention, when risks are increasing, and in acute and chronic problems.

RISKS

CHRONIC

At the moment when we initiate new conditions, the substitute side communication pathways start to be disrupted, because we are trying to create conditions for a return to the main communication pathways.

When the conditions are changed again, there is usually a short-term worsening of the health condition, because the bypasses are being disconnected.

The change flushes toxins into the blood, because the original structure is being restored.

The patient's condition subjectively worsens in the first days of treatment, but in the results of heart rate variability measurements we can see improvement.

We restore energy flows and communication to the original structures. We create the right conditions for the physical, chemical and biological functioning of lock and key.

In other words, what matters is not only the chemical composition but also the correct spatial shape of the molecule.

Therefore, biologically created conditions should always be preferred.

We prefer natural organics to artificially produced organics or inorganics.

It is about maximally aligning quantity and quality at every level.
